Home Learning and Return to School

I'm sure you'll agree with me that this half term has been incredibly strange with many challenges, but I also hope with sources of joy. I know the team and I have been really enthused by the hard work we have seen from our children.

I pray for dry weather over the half term week so that families can step away from screens for a while and enjoy the great outdoors. That's what I'm planning to do!

The team and I are optimistic for the weeks ahead. My fingers are crossed for positive news regarding schools reopening. I want nothing more than to have all our children back in school, like the rest of the country, I am waiting for what the Prime Minister announces in the coming weeks. We don't get any information ahead of the public. As soon as I am able to communicate a plan with you, I will. We have already been planning for everyone's return.

We know that everyone has at least two more weeks of remote learning after half term. I know this will continue to be a challenge for many families, particularly when having to fit learning in around your own workload. Please can I urge families to keep persevering over the coming weeks to as best we all can make sure that all our children aren't missing parts of the curriculum. Hopefully, we're nearly there. The team and I appreciate your hard work during this period of time. Thank you.

Getting a good night's sleep!

I know some of our children have been struggling to sleep over this lockdown.

Attached to this newsletter are some support materials about supporting good sleep.
